Research Proposals: a step towards creating knowledge

Research is defined in different ways – according to Cambridge dictionary research is “a detailed study of a subject, especially in order to discover (new) information or reach a (new) understanding”, whereas Merriam Webster says research is “ investigation or experimentation aimed at the discovery and interpretation of facts, revision of accepted theories or laws in the light of new facts, or practical application of such new or revised theories or laws”.

Further, research proposals are conversion of the thoughts into a document for further action – either it may be submitted to the funding agency or it may be for award of PhD degree from an university. A research proposal describes what you will investigate, why it's important, and how you will conduct your research. A general structure of a research proposal will have – Title – clear indication of proposed research, background or introduction – a brief pitch that explains the proposal with rationale, a few research questions, methodology to achieve the objectives of the research, plan of work with time schedule followed by bibliography, citations or references – depending upon the nature of the proposal.

A quality research proposal will have sufficient number of review of literature in that area to pin the problem or find the gap that will bridge the gap and finally the on completion of the work it will add to the world of knowledge or may contribute to development of tools, equipment, drug, instrument etc. that will be ultimately beneficial for the mankind.
